

ABSTRACT

Service sector has been considered the most vital part of behind the rapid growth of the Indian economy in the last couple of decades, major focus has been laid towards the trend of the growth in the tertiary sector, its major subsectors and to make a comparison between the service sector performance and the other sector of Indian economy.

The paper focuses on checking if the growth in the services sector is autonomous over the period of study or if there exists some relationship between the growth in the services sector and the other sectors of the economy. The paper also identifies structural change patterns and arrives at the empirical conclusions.