

ABSTRACT

India's health parameters are amongst the worst in the world right now and a child born in India today has less chances of survival than in Nepal or Bangladesh. Even though the Life Expectancy has doubled since Independence still there have been issues of healthcare in India. Through this paper we gain insight if improvement in health status leads to gains through economic growth. We try to analyse the impact of health parameters on the economic growth.