About the author:

Dr. Naveen Sunder is a Post-doc Researcher with Jessica Cohen at the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health. Prior to getting a PhD from Cornell University, he worked for three years as a Research Associate on impact evaluations with the Jameel Poverty Action Lab (J-PAL) and the Indian School of Business (ISB). He specializes in using microeconomics and econometrics to address questions in International Development, with a focus on topics related to education, health and nutrition. His research primarily analyzes the process of human capital acquisition at various stages of life (childhood, adolescence and adult life), and how this process is impacted by public policy.
