

Abstract

The main objective of the paper is to study the effect of certain development indicators on the inflow of FDI for some emerging economies. There are certain established indicators of economic development that we usually consider while comparing two nations (based on the progress of the economy). In this project we use these indicators to try and see if there is any effect of the variables on the inflow of FDI in a country. Using econometric analysis we try to establish a relation between the variables and the inflow of FDI in 10 different nations more or less of the same type over a period of 15 years.
