

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This paper is fruition of a long-standing desire of making an extended contribution to my core field of Environmental Economics. Having spent a large share of my Master degree in understanding the economics of environment, the longing to work under my supervisor Dr. Zareena Begum Irfan I took shape in the form of this paper. Belonging to a slow understanding group, who got the opportunity to work under her, I feel heartened and privileged.

I extend my gratitude to my panel member Dr. Rupel Nargunam for her valuable feedback and encouragement, which kept me going. I'm also indebted to my friends and colleagues at MSE who have been a constant support. Your ideas and teachings have been a part of this paper in one form or the other. Extending my gratitude and heartfelt of thanks to all the respondents who have made it possible for the paper to be constructed. And lastly, I'm thankful to my mother and my brother for being the base of anything and everything that I'm doing and am yet to do in my coming times.
